

Mrozowski Background

Stephen Mrozowski is the founding director of the Andrew Fiske Memorial Center for Archaeological Research at the University of Massachusetts Boston where he also serves as Chair of the Department of Anthropology. Mrozowski's research encompasses the study of colonization and its role in shaping the modern world. His particular research interests include social theory, historical archaeology, environmental archaeology, urban archaeology, industrial archaeology and indigenous archaeologies. He has conducted field research in Eastern North America, Northern Alaska, the Caribbean and Northern Britain. He has published more than sixty scholarly articles and monographs and is the author of The Archaeology of Class in Urban America published by Cambridge University Press in 2006, coauthor of Living on the Boott: Historical Archaeology at the Boott Cotton Mills Boardinghouses, Lowell, Massachusetts published by the University of Massachusetts Press in 1996, and co-editor of Lines that Divide: Historical Archaeologies of Race, Class, and Gender published by the University Tennessee Press in 2000.