

Tina L. Thurston
Department of Anthropology
The University at Buffalo, State University of New York
380 MFAC, Ellicott Complex
Buffalo NY 14261

tt27@buffalo.edu
716.645.0408

Tina Thurston (PhD 1996 University of Wisconsin, Madison) is an archaeologist who works primarily in Sweden, Denmark and Northern Ireland. Using political ecology, structuration, and landscape paradigms in tandem with regional field approaches, she studies the interpenetration between the natural world and human livelihood, and how these factors operate at the interface between ordinary people and state authority, especially in terms of domination and resistance, interethnic tension, and violent conflict. Building upon previous work within agricultural contexts, her current work concerns the social and political power of pastoral peoples and their experience during 'encapsulation' by expansionist states. She is presently PI of two concurrent projects with long term perspectives spanning the Iron Age through the Early Modern eras: Pastoralists and the state: forest farmers of the 'small lands' on Sweden's Småland Plateau, and Agropastoral production and sociopolitical change in County Armagh, Northern Ireland. Dr. Thurston is an Associate Professor at The University at Buffalo, State University of New York.