

NABO 2022 Collaborative Meeting

Reykjavík, Iceland Sept. 28-30th 2022

Thanks to an initiative by Orri Vésteinsson and U Iceland we are launching a three-day collaborative NABO meeting Sept. 28th, 29th, and 30th 2022 in Reykjavik Iceland. This will be a hybrid event, but we hope to have significant live participation. The proceedings will be recorded and posted on the NABO website.

Our theme for Sept 28 and 29th will be "North Atlantic Works Back in Progress" with the aim of both reporting on new work in the lab and field and looking ahead to ongoing collaborations and new digital tools for data management and community engagement. We anticipate overviews of new and renewed projects and initiatives with field and lab results from across our region and overviews of exciting new interdisciplinary initiatives.

We will have both traditional 15-minute talks and a set of 5 minute "lightning round" presentations that may be a supplement or substitute for posters. We invite presentations for Sept 28-29th we and are very friendly to early career researchers.

The 30th is a special session organized by Orri on "Sticks and Stones in North Atlantic Archaeology" and will feature new work in archaeobotany, geoarchaeology, zooarchaeology, human bioarchaeology and artifact analyses. This is a separate but allied session, and all are invited (live or virtual).

Please contact Tom McGovern (thomas.h.mcgovern@gmail.com) if you are interested in participating and let us know if you can come to lovely Iceland or will be an online visitor only. Please provide a preliminary title and author list and a short 100 word summary.

A draft program will be circulated by early September, so please contact us soon if you want to be included.

All best wishes for the summer!
